Athens, 29 October 2013

ADEDY and the workers in the Hellenic public sector express our support and solidarity with the UNISON members working in higher education and who carrying out a 24hour general strike on 31st October.

The workers in the most European countries, like the Greek workers, are fighting against the policies of austerity, the cut of the incomes, the redundancies, the flexible labor relations, the deterioration of public social goods.

The workers in the Hellenic public sector, continue and escalate our struggle against the policies imposed by the government and Troika, which under the pretext of the debt try to eliminate our economic, labor and collective rights. In addition, they proceed to the abolition of public service units, especially education and health services and lay off permanent staff.

The trade union organizations in our country are taking a general strike in public and private sector on 6th November.

The struggle of the workers in every country, the joint and coordinated struggle in all countries are the only hope so that we could overthrow the unpopular policies and overcome the crisis in the interest of the workers and the peoples.

With our best wishes for a successful strike!
