UNISON knows that your working conditions play a very important role in your health and safety and wellbeing. This is why we continue to lead the campaign for better health and safety protection for you at work.

With 1.3 million members providing vital public services, we know better than anyone the risks and dangers faced every day by the staff doing these important jobs.

That is why we can help you make your workplace safer and healthier.
The dangers you face in your workplace are often hidden. What may appear to be harmless working practices can lead to serious injury or illness and could even threaten your life.

This is why we continue to campaign for better health and safety protection for public service workers.

We are making workplaces safer, wherever you work and whatever job you do.

Our extensive network of health and safety reps are there to help UNISON members deal with any health and safety problems they face. They are trained to deal with a full range of issues, and to make workplaces safer.

Contact your branch to find out who your health and safety rep is.

If you are interested in becoming a safety rep please contact your local branch health and safety officer, local steward or branch secretary – if you are not sure who these people are – contact UNISON Direct for advice.
